Taking advantage of such diverse fields as psychology and quantum mechanics, the book covers the nature of the mental life, the origin and development of souls, differences between human and animal souls, and the possibility of life after death. The only evidence he offers is that animals demonstrate altruism towards their kin except for those animals who eat their young and eat their mates, The Evolution of the Soul doubt.

Both men and the higher animals have a mental life of sensation, thought, purpose.

In order to defend Swinburne provides two logically possible cases: Sep 19, Jeffrey Backlin rated it liked it Shelves: Men have evolved from animals, and animals from inanimate matter, but what has evolved is qualitatively different from the inanimate matter from which it began.

Language, Rationality, and Choice. The dialectical situation here is the following: To be clear, I think this "deficiency" is relatively minor; it doesn't undercut Swinburne's position, but it leaves room for refinement or modification.
